
SUR is covered by the following abstracting and indexing services: IBSS (International Bibliography of the Social Sciences); ISN Zurich (International Relations and Security Network); DOAJ (Directory of Open Access Journals) and SSRN (Social Science Research Network). In addition, SUR is also available at the following commercial databases: EBSCO, HEINonline, ProQuest and Scopus. SUR has been rated A1 and B1, in Colombia and in Brazil (Qualis), respectively.
Human Rights in Motion

CONTENTS

LUCIA NADER, JUANA KWEITEL, & MARCOS FUCHS

Introduction 7

“We Did not Create Sur Journal Because We Had Certainties, But Because We Were Full of Doubts” 11

PROFILE OF PEDRO PAULO POPPOVIC

MALAK EL-CHICHINI POPPOVIC

OSCAR VILHENA VIEIRA

Reflections On the International Human Rights Movement in the 21st Century: Only the Answers Change 17

LANGUAGE

SARA BURKE

What an Era of Global Protests Says about the Effectiveness of Human Rights as a Language to Achieve Social Change 27

VINODH JAICHAND

After Human Rights Standard Setting, What’s Next? 35

DAVID PETRASEK

Global Trends and the Future of Human Rights Advocacy 45

SAMUEL MOYN

The Future of Human Rights 57

STEPHEN HOPGOOD

EMÍLIO ÁLVAREZ ICAZA

Human Rights as an Effective Way to Produce Social Change 77

INTERVIEW WITH RAQUEL ROLNIK

UN Special Procedures System is “Designed to Be Ineffective” 81

INTERVIEW WITH PAULO SÉRGIO PINHEIRO

“Besides Human Rights, I Don’t See a Solution for Serving the Victims” 91

INTERVIEW WITH KUMI NAIDOO

“The Rule of Law Has Consolidated All the Injustices That Existed Before It” 97

THEMES

JANET LOVE

Are we Depoliticising Economic Power?: Wilful Business Irresponsibility and Bureaucratic Response by Human Rights Defenders 105

PHIL BLOOMER

Are Human Rights an Effective Tool for Social Change?: A Perspective on Human Rights and Business 115

GONZALO BERRÓN

DIEGO LORENTE PÉREZ DE EULATE

Issues and Challenges Facing Networks and Organisations Working in Migration and Human Rights in Mesoamerica 133

GLORIA CAREAGA PÉREZ

The Protection of LGBTI Rights: An Uncertain Outlook 143
Emerging powers: Can it be that sexuality and human rights is a ‘lateral issue’?

SONIA CORRÊA

181  Transitional Justice and Social Change

CLARA SANDOVAL

193  Human Rights Litigation in Southern Africa: Not Easily Able to Discount Prevailing Public Opinion

NICOLE FRITZ

201  Making Laws Work: Advocacy Forum’s Experiences in Prevention of Torture in Nepal

MANDIRA SHARMA

213  Human Rights and Social Change in Angola

MARIA LÚCIA DA SILVEIRA

219  The Struggle for the Recognition of Human Rights in Mozambique: Advances and Setbacks

SALVADOR NKAMATE

227  The Human Rights Struggle in Indonesia: International Advances, Domestic Deadlocks

HARIS AZHAR

237  A vision of China’s Democratic Future

HAN DONGFANG

247  Challenges to the Sustainability of the Human Rights Agenda in Brazil

ANA VALÉRIA ARAÚJO

257  Are we Throwing Out the Baby with the Bathwater?: The North-South Dynamic from the Perspective of Human Rights Work in Northern Ireland

MAGGIE BEIRNE

265  “The Particularities in Cuba Are Not Always Identified Nor Understood By Human Rights Activists From Other Countries”

INTERVIEW WITH MARÍA-I. FAGUAGA IGLESIAS

273  Why Should We Have to “Represent” Anyone?

FATEH AZZAM

283  Voices from the Jungle on the Witness Stand of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights

MARIO MELO

293  NGOs, Human Rights and Representation

ADRIAN GURZA LAVALLE

305  Experimentation and Innovation in the Accountability of Human Rights Organizations in Latin America

JUANA KWEITEL

323  Democratic Minorities in 21st Century Democracies

PEDRO ABRAMOVAY AND HELOISA GRIGGS

335  Human Rights Familiarity and Socio-Economic Status: A Four-Country Study

JAMES RON, DAVID CROW AND SHANNON GOLDEN

353  To Build a Global Movement to Make Human Rights and Social Justice a Reality For All

CHRIS GROVE

365  “Role of International Organizations Should Be to Support Local Defenders”

INTERVIEW WITH MARY LAWLOR AND ANDREW ANDERSON
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>375</td>
<td>The Global Human Rights Movement in the 21st Century: Reflections from the Perspective of a National Human Rights NGO from the South</td>
<td>GASTÓN CHILLIER AND PÉTALLA BRANDÃO TIMO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>385</td>
<td>Systems, Brains and Quiet Places: Thoughts on the Future of Human Rights Campaigning</td>
<td>MARTIN KIRK</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>399</td>
<td>A ‘Movement Support’ Organization: The Experience of the Association For Women’s Rights in Development (AWID)</td>
<td>ROCHELLE JONES, SARAH ROSENHEK AND ANNA TURLEY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>411</td>
<td>Supporting Locally-Rooted Organizations: The Work of the Fund For Global Human Rights in Mexico</td>
<td>ANA PAULA HERNÁNDEZ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>419</td>
<td>Human Rights Activism In Times of Cognitive Saturation: Talking About Tools</td>
<td>MIGUEL PULIDO JIMÉNEZ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>427</td>
<td>Raising Digital Consciousness: An Analysis of the Opportunities and Risks Facing Human Rights Activists in a Digital Age</td>
<td>MALLIK DUTT AND NADIA RASUL</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>437</td>
<td>New Information and Communication Technologies’ Influence on Activism in Cambodia</td>
<td>SOPHEAP CHAK</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>449</td>
<td>Strategic Litigation Experiences in the Inter-American Human Rights System</td>
<td>SANDRA CARVALHO AND EUDARDO BAKER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>461</td>
<td>“Get Off Your Pedestal!”</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH FERNAND ALPHEN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>469</td>
<td>“NGO’s are not the Same as Civil Society But Some NGOs Can Play the Role of Facilitators”</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH MARY KALDOR</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>475</td>
<td>Convergence Towards the Global Middle: “Who Sets the Global Human Rights Agenda and How”</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH LOUIS BICKFORD</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>483</td>
<td>Solid Organisations in a Liquid World</td>
<td>LUCIA NADER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>491</td>
<td>Why We Welcome Human Rights Partnerships</td>
<td>KENNETH ROTH</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>499</td>
<td>The Future of Human Rights: From Gatekeeping to Symbiosis</td>
<td>CÉSAR RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>511</td>
<td>Towards a Multipolar Civil Society</td>
<td>DHANANJAYAN SRISKANDARAJAH AND MANDEEP TIWANA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>519</td>
<td>“Avoiding Using Power Would Be Devastating for Human Rights”</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH EMILIE M. HAFNER-BURTON</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>525</td>
<td>“We Are Very Much A Multi-Polar World Now, But Not One Comprised Solely Of Nation States”</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH MARK MALLOCH-BROWN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>531</td>
<td>“Human Rights Organisations Should Have a Closer Pulse to the Ground” Or How We Missed the Bus</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH SALIL SHETTY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>539</td>
<td>“North-South solidarity is key”</td>
<td>INTERVIEW WITH LOUISE ARBOUR</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INTRODUCTION

HUMAN RIGHTS IN MOTION:
A MAP TO A MOVEMENT’S FUTURE

Lucia Nader (Executive Director, Conectas)
Juana Kweitel (Program Director, Conectas)
Marcos Fuchs (Associate Director, Conectas)

Sur Journal was created ten years ago as a vehicle to deepen and strengthen bonds between academics and activists from the Global South concerned with human rights, in order to magnify their voices and their participation before international organizations and academia. Our main motivation was the fact that, particularly in the Southern hemisphere, academics were working alone and there was very little exchange between researchers from different countries. The journal’s aim has been to provide individuals and organizations working to defend human rights with research, analyses and case studies that combine academic rigor and practical interest. In many ways, these lofty ambitions have been met with success: in the past decade, we have published articles from dozens of countries on issues as diverse as health and access to treatment, transitional justice, regional mechanisms and information and human rights, to name a few. Published in three languages and available online and in print for free, our project also remains unique in terms of geographical reach, critical perspective and its Southern ‘accent’. In honour of the founding editor of this journal, Pedro Paulo Poppovic, the 20th issue opens with a biography (by João Paulo Charleaux) of this sociologist who has been one of the main contributors to this publication’s success.

This past decade has also been, in many ways, a successful one for the human rights movement as a whole. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights has recently turned 60, new international treaties have been adopted and the old but good global and regional monitoring systems are in full operation, despite criticisms regarding their effectiveness and attempts by States to curb their authority. From a strategic perspective, we continue to use, with more or less success, advocacy, litigation and naming-and-shaming as our main tools for change. In addition, we continue to nurture partnerships between what we categorize as local, national and international organizations within our movement.

Nevertheless, the political and geographic coordinates under which the global human
The global human rights movement has undergone profound changes. Over the past decade, we have witnessed hundreds of thousands of people take to the streets to protest against social and political injustices. We have also seen emerging powers from the South play an increasingly influential role in the definition of the global human rights agenda. Additionally, the past ten years have seen the rapid growth of social networks as a tool of mobilization and as a privileged forum for sharing political information between users. In other words, the journal is publishing its 20th issue against a backdrop that is very different from that of ten years ago. The protests that recently filled the streets of many countries around the globe, for example, were not organized by traditional social movements nor by unions or human rights NGOs, and people’s grievances, more often than not, were expressed in terms of social justice and not as rights. Does this mean that human rights are no longer seen as an effective language for producing social change? Or that human rights organizations have lost some of their ability to represent wronged citizens? Emerging powers themselves, despite their newly-acquired international influence, have hardly been able – or willing – to assume stances departing greatly from those of “traditional” powers. How and where can human rights organizations advocate for change? Are Southern-based NGOs in a privileged position to do this? Are NGOs from emerging powers also gaining influence in international forums?

It was precisely to reflect upon these and other pressing issues that, for this 20th issue, SUR’s editors decided to enlist the help of over 50 leading human rights activists and academics from 18 countries, from Ecuador to Nepal, from China to the US. We asked them to ponder on what we saw as some of the most urgent and relevant questions facing the global human rights movement today: 1. Who do we represent? 2. How do we combine urgent issues with long-term impacts? 3. Are human rights still an effective language for producing social change? 4. How have new information and communication technologies influenced activism? 5. What are the challenges of working internationally from the South?

The result, which you now hold in your hands, is a roadmap for the global human rights movement in the 21st century – it offers a vantage point from which it is possible to observe where the movement stands today and where it is heading. The first stop is a reflection on these issues by the founding directors of Conectas Human Rights, Oscar Vilhena Vieira and Malak El-Chichini Poppovic. The roadmap then goes on to include interviews and articles, both providing in-depth analyses of human rights issues, as well as notes from the field, more personalized accounts of experiences working with human rights, which we have organized into six categories, although most of them could arguably be allocated to more than one category:

Language. In this section, we have included articles that ponder the question of whether human rights – as a utopia, as norms and as institutions – are still effective for producing social change. Here, the contributions range from analyses on human rights as a language for change (Stephen Hopgood and Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro), empirical research on the use of the language of human rights for articulating grievances in recent mass protests (Sara Burke), to reflections on the standard-setting role and effectiveness of international human rights institutions (Raquel Rolnik, Vinodh Jaichand and Emílio Álvarez Icaza). It also includes studies on the movement’s global trends (David Petrasek), challenges to the movement’s emphasis on protecting the rule of law (Kumi Naidoo), and strategic proposals to better ensure a compromise between utopianism and realism in relation to human rights (Samuel Moyn).

Themes. Here we have included contributions that address specific human rights topics from an original and critical standpoint. Four themes were analysed: economic power and corporate accountability for human rights violations (Phil Bloomer, Janet Love and Gonzalo Berrón); sexual politics and LGBTI rights (Sonia Corrêa, Gloria Careaga Pérez and Arvind Narrain); migration (Diego Lorente Pérez de Eulate); and, finally, transitional justice (Clara Sandoval).

Perspectives. This section encompasses country-specific accounts, mostly field notes from human rights activists on the ground. Those contributions come from places as diverse as Angola (Maria Lúcia da Silveira), Brazil (Ana Valéria Araújo), Cuba (María-Ileana Faguaga Iglesias), Indonesia (Haris Azhar), Mozambique (Salvador Nkamat) and Nepal (Mandira Sharma). But they all share a critical perspective on human rights, including for instance a sceptical perspective on the relation between litigation and public opinion in Southern Africa (Nicole Fritz), a provocative view of the democratic future of China and its relation to labour rights (Han Dongfang), and a thoughtful analysis of the North-South duality from Northern Ireland (Maggie Beirne).

Voices. Here the articles go to the core of the question of whom the global human rights movement represents. Adrian Gurza Lavalle and Juana Kweitel take note of the pluralisation of representation and innovative forms of accountability adopted by human rights NGOs. Others study the pressure for more representation or a louder voice in international human rights mechanisms (such as in the Inter-American system, as reported by Mario Melo) and in representative institutions such as national legislatures (as analysed by Pedro Abramovay and Heloisa Griggs). Finally, Chris Grove, as well as James Ron, David Crow and Shannon Golden emphasize, in their contributions, the need for a link between human rights NGOs and grassroots groups, including economically disadvantaged populations. As a counter-argument, Fateh Azzam questions the need of human rights activists to represent anyone, taking issue with the critique of NGOs as being overly dependent on donors. Finally, Mary Lawlor and Andrew Anderson provide an account of a Northern organization’s efforts to attend to the needs of local human rights defenders as they, and only they, define them.

Tools. In this section, the editors included contributions that focus on the instruments used by the global human rights movement to do its work. This includes a debate on the role of technology in promoting change (Mallika Dutt and Nadia Rasul, as well as Sopheap Chak and Miguel Pulido Jiménez) and perspectives on the challenges of human rights campaigning, analysed provocatively by Martín Kirk and Fernand Alphen in their respective contributions. Other articles point to the need of organizations to be more grounded in local contexts, as noted by Ana Paula Hernández in relation to Mexico, by Louis Bickford in what he sees as a convergence towards the global middle, and finally by Rochelle Jones, Sarah Rosenhek and Anna Turley in their movement-support model. In addition, it is noted by Mary Kaldor that NGOs are not the same as civil society, properly understood. Furthermore, litigation and international work are cast in a critical light by Sandra Carvalho and Eduardo Baker in relation to the dilemma between long and short term strategies in the Inter-American system. Finally, Gastón Chillier and Pétalla Brandão Timo analyse South-South cooperation from the viewpoint of a national human rights NGO in Argentina.

Multipolarity. Here, the articles challenge our ways of thinking about power in the multipolar world we currently live in, with contributions from the heads of some of the world's largest international human rights organizations based in the North (Kenneth Roth and Salil Shetty) and in the South (Lucía Nader, César Rodríguez-Garavito, Dhananjayan Sriskandarajah and Mandeep Tiwana). This section also debates what multipolarity means in relation to States (Emilie M. Hafner-Burton), international organizations and civil society (Louise Arbour) and businesses (Mark Malloch-Brown).

Conectas hopes this issue will foster debate on the future of the global human rights movement in the 21st century, enabling it to reinvent itself as necessary to offer better protection of human rights on the ground.

Finally, we would like to emphasize that this issue of Sur Journal was made possible by the support of the Ford Foundation, Open Society Foundations, the Oak Foundation, the Sigrid Rausing Trust, the International Development Research Centre (IDRC) and the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency (SIDA). Additionally, Conectas Human Rights is especially grateful for the collaboration of the authors and the hard work of the Journal’s editorial team. We are also extremely thankful for the work of Maria Brant and Manoela Miklos for conceiving this Issue and for conducting most of the interviews, and for Thiago Amparo for joining the editorial team and making this Issue possible. We are also tremendously thankful for Luz González’s tireless work with editing the contributions received, and for Ana Cernov for coordinating the overall editorial process.
Human Rights in Motion

Multipolarity

LUCIA NADER
Solid Organisations in a Liquid World

KENNETH ROTH
Why We Welcome Human Rights Partnerships

CÉSAR RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO
The Future of Human Rights: From Gatekeeping to Symbiosis

DHNANJAYAN SRISKANDARAJAH AND MANDEEP TIWANA
Towards a Multipolar Civil Society

INTERVIEW WITH EMILIE M. HAFNER-BURTON
“Avoiding Using power Would be Devastating for Human Rights”

INTERVIEW WITH MARK MALLOCH-BROWN
“We are Very Much a Multi-polar World Now, But not One Comprised Solely of Nation States”

INTERVIEW WITH SALIL SHETTY
“Human Rights Organisations Should Have a Closer Pulse to the Ground” Or How We Missed the Bus

INTERVIEW WITH LOUISE ARBOR
“North-South solidarity is Key”
CÉSAR RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO

César Rodríguez-Garavito is Associate Professor of Law at the University of the Andes (Colombia), and serves as International Director of the Center for Law, Justice, and Society (Dejusticia), a human rights NGO based in Bogota. He has been a visiting professor at Stanford University, Brown University (the United States), the University of Pretoria (South Africa), the Getulio Vargas Foundation (Brazil) and Central European University (Hungary). He serves in the editorial boards of the Annual Review of Law and Social Science and OpenGlobalRights, as well as in the executive boards of Fundar Mexico and the Business and Human Rights Resource Center.

E-mail: cerogara@gmail.com

ABSTRACT

The international human rights movement faces a context of uncertainty due to: (i) the rise of a multipolar world with new emerging powers, (ii) the emergence of new actors and legal and political strategies, (iii) the challenges and opportunities presented by information and communication technologies, as well as (iv) the threat posed by extreme environmental degradation. The author first reviews the critical literature on human rights, highlighting how these transformations are unsettling prevailing structures and practices in the human rights field such as: the hierarchical nature of traditional human rights discourse and movement, asymmetry between North and South organisations, over-legalisation of human rights language, and the lack of concrete assessments of human rights outcomes. The author identifies two responses to these critiques among human rights practitioners: denial that defends traditional boundaries and gatekeepers, on one hand, and reflexive reconstruction that reimagines practices and boundaries to generate productive symbiosis among diverse human rights actors, on the other. Overall, the author favours the latter approach, arguing that human rights practitioners should strive to create a human rights ecosystem. This approach seeks strengthen the collective capacity of the human rights movement by harnessing its diversity. Thus, a human rights ecosystem prioritizes collaboration and symbiosis with a much more varied range of actors and issues coupled with more decentralised and network-based forms of collaboration than that of previous decades.

Original in English.

Received in September 2014.

KEYWORDS

Human Rights Criticism – Gatekeeper – Symbiosis – Civil Society – Global South

This paper is published under the creative commons license.
This paper is available in digital format at <www.surjournal.org>.
Uncertainty seems to be the dominant mood in human rights circles these days. A new wave of scholarship debates foundational issues about the human rights movement (DOUZINAS; GEARTY, 2014), and wonders whether we have now entered its “endtimes” (HOPGOOD, 2013). Leading NGOs and activists sense that the ground is shifting under their feet. “Mountains of new information and rapid changes are coming at us from different directions at dizzying speed,” as one of my roundtable companions put it at a thought-provoking meeting of human rights NGOs and funders from around the world, which the Ford Foundation convened in Marrakesh in April 2014 to discuss the contours and challenges of the current moment.

The sense of disorientation stems from the convergence of four structural transformations that are pulling the human rights field in different directions. First, the rise of emerging powers (such as the BRICS countries – Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa) and the relative decline of Europe and the United States point to a multi-polar world order. Together with the proliferation of soft-law and hard-law international standards, this trend results in a legal and political arena that is both broader and more fragmented (DE BÚRCA; KEOHANE; SABEL, 2013). In this new context, states and NGOs in the Global North no longer have sole control over the creation and implementation of human rights standards, as new actors (from transnational social movements to transnational corporations to Global South states and NGOs) emerge as influential voices.

Second, the range of actors and legal and political strategies has expanded considerably. Time-honoured strategies such as naming and shaming recalcitrant States into compliance with human rights are being complemented with new strategies for transnational advocacy that involve a host of actors and targets of activism, including social movements, online media outlets, transnational corporations, inter-governmental organisations, universities, and virtual activism networks (RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO, 2014a).

*This article is partially based on Rodríguez Garavito (2014a, 2014b).
Third, information and communication technologies (ICTs) present new challenges and opportunities for human rights. As shown by the mobilisations associated with the Occupy Movement around the world, tools such as social networks, video documentaries, digital reporting, online learning, and long-distance education have the potential to accelerate political change, reduce the informational disadvantages suffered by marginalised groups, and bring together national, regional and global groups capable of having a direct impact on the protection of rights (ZUCKERMAN, 2013).

Fourth, extreme environmental degradation – climate change, water scarcity, the rapid extinction of species and forests, uncontrolled pollution – has become one of the most serious threats to human rights. After all, human rights mean very little if what is at risk is life on earth itself. Thus, ecological questions are central to global discussions regarding human rights, from those that question the traditional conception of economic development to those that seek to connect environmental justice with social justice, and including those looking for new conceptions that make human rights compatible with the rights of nature (SANTOS, 2014).

The resulting uncertainty is an uncomfortable position for the human rights community, which has courageously confronted dictatorships, corporate abuse, socio-economic injustice, ethnocide, and environmental degradation for decades. Being left with more questions than answers is disconcerting for NGOs that have come to be expected to provide clear-cut legal solutions to complex moral and political dilemmas.

Yet I believe we should welcome this discomfort. For transitions – between strategic models, intellectual paradigms, governance structures, technologies, or all of the above— represent moments of creativity and innovation in social fields. In human rights circles, where we have erected such high organisational and ideational that it has become difficult for us to be reflexive and self-critical, this raises an unprecedented opportunity to reconsider some of our core assumptions: who counts as a member of the human rights movement, what the disciplinary bases of human rights knowledge should be, what strategies can be most efficacious in a multi-polar and multimedia world. For the first time, important tensions and asymmetries – South v. North, elite v. grassroots, national v. global— are being openly discussed with a view to overcoming such divisions and strengthening the collective capacity of the movement.

In order to contribute to this collective reflection regarding organisational forms and strategies, this paper has both critical as well as reconstructive components. I will begin by briefly reviewing the criticisms that, in my view, are most relevant and useful in current debates about human rights. Then I characterise two types of reactions of human rights organisations in the face of these criticisms: on one hand, the defence of traditional boundaries and gatekeeping mechanisms of the field; on the other, reflexive reconstruction and expansion of the boundaries of the field. In the final section of the text, I adopt the latter position and argue that the above-mentioned structural transformations point towards a much more diverse, decentralised and network-like human rights field than that of previous decades. I maintain that, although actors and strategies that have dominated the field of human rights will remain relevant, the movement is shifting toward the structure and logic of an ecosystem. As in ecosystems, the field’s robustness will depend on the collaboration and complementarity among different forms of organisation and diverse strategies. Thus, I conclude by proposing that practitioners and organisations will need to spend less time on gatekeeping and more on symbiosis; less on guarding conventional strategies and boundaries, and more on finding more horizontal and effective modes of collaboration across borders.

1 Five Problems with Human Rights

The critical bibliography about human rights is extensive and quite varied. It includes philosophical and historical objections as well as geopolitical and cultural deconstructions\(^2\). Given that the emphasis of this paper is on current discussions regarding organisational forms and strategies of the movement, I will concentrate on criticisms regarding this specific angle of the debate.

First, critics have rightly pointed out that human rights as a discourse and a movement tends to be vertical and rigid. Perhaps the best example of this criticism is international criminal justice (HOPGOOD, 2013). Those of us who practice human rights in societies that are trying to overcome long periods of armed conflict, like Colombia, experience the well-known tension between the dictates of international criminal law on the one hand, and the political negotiations necessary to transition from conflict to peace on the other. While we collaborate with global NGOs on this and many other issues, we note with surprise the inflexibility of some of their positions regarding transitional justice, stemming from a seemingly unconditional prioritisation of criminal justice over other forms of justice and reparations. And the International Criminal Court, with its preliminary investigations into transitional justice processes like those in Colombia, has tended to solidify even more this message. This is detrimental in contexts where peace negotiations with actors such as the FARC (Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia) require greater flexibility and an appreciation of national issues, without granting impunity for crimes against humanity (UPRIMNY, SÁNCHEZ; SÁNCHEZ, 2014). Yet the rigid interpretation of international justice that some global organisations espouse leaves little room for alternatives – for instance, reduced prison sentences and restorative justice – and instead, tends to present their interpretation as the definitive content of international criminal and humanitarian law.

A second critique pertains to the over-legalisation of human rights. This relates not only to the emphasis on legal standard-setting that characterise human rights, but also to the disproportionate role given to lawyers in the movement. Although the international legal framework for human rights is a historic achievement, the over-legalisation of the field has had two counterproductive effects. First, as Amartya Sen (2006) has argued, viewing human rights claims exclusively through the lens of legal rules may reduce their social efficacy, as a large part of their power lies in the moral vision they embody regardless of whether they have been translated into legal rules. Second, technical legal knowledge is a barrier to entry into the field that alienates grassroots activists and other professionals (from experts in information technology to natural scientists and artists) that make invaluable contributions to the human rights cause. This is particularly worrisome when it comes to fundamentally important topics such as climate change, which profoundly affect human rights, but cannot be understood or acted upon without the participation of professionals from other fields. It may also alienate key new constituencies like citizen e-activists, who are already using human rights frameworks but feel distanced from the technical language and tools of the traditional movement.

Over time, the closed nature and legal specialisation of the field has led to another difficulty: the tendency to adopt the defence of legal frameworks as an end in itself, instead of as a means to improving the living conditions of those who suffer violations of human rights. The current international debate about business and human rights provides a clear illustration of this. As those of us who have participated in regional and global consultations convened by the UN Working Group (WG) (responsible for implementing the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human rights) have seen, this is a highly polarised debate in which both sides staunchly defend their positions. On the one side, there are those who defend a soft law approach to the Guiding Principles. On the other, there are those who refuse to use the Principles and demand a binding international treaty. What is clear is that a good part of the polarisation and unproductiveness of the debate is due to the fact that both the WG and the law-oriented NGOs tend to concentrate on defending a regulatory paradigm, instead of focusing on the difference that such a paradigm could make in practice (RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO, forthcoming).

A fourth critique that needs to be taken seriously is the obvious asymmetry between the Global North and South in the human rights field. Organisations in the North receive over 70% of the funds from philanthropic human rights foundations (FOUNDATION CENTER, 2013). They continue to have disproportionate power when it comes to setting the international agenda. And too often they define this agenda based on internal deliberations, rather than through collaborative processes with NGOs of the Global South, social movements, activist networks, and other relevant actors.

Finally, critical voices inside and outside the movement have rightly singled out a particularly complex problem: how can we measure the impact of human rights and calculate the opportunity cost of the resources and efforts dedicated to their advancement? For a movement dedicated to creating legal standards and dominated by those of us with legal training, the question of the actual impact of these norms does not come naturally. For foundations and NGOs that are used to talking in terms of outputs instead of outcomes, the question of how to measure the latter remains elusive. This is a conversation and an ongoing task that I believe should concern the entire movement.

2 From Gatekeeping to Symbiosis

Faced with these critiques, the response could be celebration, denial, or reconstruction. Celebration tends to be the response of some sectors of academia which, after having turned towards what Santos (2004) calls “celebratory postmodernism,” are content

Since human rights practitioners cannot afford to simply celebrate criticism and rejoice in uncertainty, their responses oscillate between defensiveness and reflexive reconstruction. Defensiveness tends to be the reaction of NGOs and some lawyers who are highly invested in the dominant model of human rights advocacy. Reflexive reconstruction is the response of those who recognise the value of such critiques, but believe that they do not represent the end of an ideal and the struggle for human rights, but rather the need for new ways of thinking about and practicing them.

The contrast between these two approaches is typical of moments of transition and shifting paradigm within social fields. In those situations, actors engage in “boundary processes” (PACHUCKI; PENDERGRASS; LAMONT, 2007), whereby they seek to redefine the contours of the field. While those on the defensive argue that it is necessary to keep the traditional boundaries of human rights, those favouring reflexive reconstruction try to redraw the boundaries to accommodate criticisms. I characterise these two approaches as gatekeeping and symbiosis, respectively.

2.1 Gatekeeping and Its Woes

Guarding the traditional boundaries of the field takes up a disproportionate amount of time and energy. For example, in some academic and advocacy circles there are continued efforts to build a wall between “core” human rights and other rights, such as social and economic rights (NEIER, 2013). This happens despite the fact that, as we will see, social movements, NGOs, courts, international treaties and contemporary theories of justice effectively tore down this fence during the last two decades.

Similar to what happens in cities, gatekeeping efforts multiply in times of uncertainty and insecurity such as that which the human rights field is experiencing. The human rights neighbourhood is changing: the gatekeepers and traditional guards (Northern governments and NGOs) no longer have the same power as before in an increasingly multi-polar world. Trespassing has become the norm as new actors (from e-activists to local NGOs) circumvent the gates by directly networking with each other across borders and contest the very borders of the field (North v. South, elite v. grassroots, legal vs. non-legal).

Given this context, ideas and strategies that try to provide clarity amidst the haziness are necessary. For example, questions regarding the priorities of the movement and its excessive emphasis on the creation of legal standards are timely. However, these analyses become problematic, both empirically and strategically, when they reinforce the conventional contours of the field – such as when Hafner-Burton (2014) argues that “we need to set more priorities based on the likely consequences of success”, which implies “prioritising some rights and some places over others”.

From an empirical point of view, proposals of this type are at odds with the above-mentioned transformations in the geopolitical, social, and technological context in which human rights work takes place. They imply that there is a group of actors that set the priorities, and therefore, act as gatekeepers who determine the international agenda of human rights. Thus, the key actors are a limited number of “steward States” willing to promote human rights around the world through their foreign policy (HAFNER-BURTON, 2013). The protagonists – the “we” of the proposal – are these States and, probably, the international NGOs with direct access to them.

If this proposal sounds familiar, it is because it describes the predominant way in which the international human rights agenda has traditionally been set, with disproportionate influence from Washington, Brussels, Geneva, or London (BOB, 2010, CARPENTER, 2014). Yet, looking forward, it is increasingly out of pace with a less uneven international order, a fragmented governance system, and a human rights movement that is much more diverse and decentralised than in past decades.

The centrifugal pressure in the field of human rights is also brought on by ICTs, and the rise of “network societies” (CASTELLS, 2009). Priority setting is a fundamental task in forms of organisation characterised by hierarchical structures and centralised decision-making. But they become less relevant and feasible in the network-like structures that key actors in the field have increasingly adopted, from inter-governmental governance bodies to transnational social movements and multinational corporations.

As noted, the cumulative effect of these transformations has led to an explosion of actors who use the language and the values of human rights, but have broken down the fences of the gated community. Among them are grassroots groups, online activists, religious organisations, think tanks, artists’ collectives, scientific associations, film makers, and many other individuals and organisations around the world. They are mobilising for human rights not just through traditional legal advocacy tactics, but also through new ones like online campaigns that have put effective pressure on States and private actors to comply with human rights. This is what is happening in the most successful cases, such as the 2013 campaign against sweatshop labour in the Bangladeshi apparel industry, which involved the transnational labour movement, national and international NGOs, and virtual activist networks like Avaaz.

In this new context, the idea of ‘prioritising some rights and places over others’, if taken as a prescription for the human rights movement as a whole, is also problematic from a strategic point of view. First, who would set the priorities in such a plural and decentralised field? What criterion and practical procedures would be used to ascertain “core” rights and distinguish them from other rights, or to assert that “discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity” is “the one big, and urgent” issue in need of international regulation (HAFNER-BURTON, 2014). How can such a statement stand when NGOs and communities around the world are mobilising for equally important regulations with regard to such issues as indigenous peoples’ rights or the right to food?

Second, while scholars and practitioners like Hafner-Burton rightly criticise too little attention being given to the implementation of legal standards, even as new ones are proposed, it is equally important to realize that gatekeeping has costs of its own. A loss of legitimacy is not the least of them. Gated communities, by definition, operate with a double standard: one that applies to insiders and another to outsiders. In a world moving toward multi-polarity, the traditional exemption from international scrutiny that steward States have enjoyed has become a fundamental problem for the legitimacy and effectiveness of human rights. With increasing confidence and supporting evidence, emerging powers and other Southern states cite such an asymmetry in order to effectively deflect criticisms for their human rights violations and demand similar exemptions.

This was clear, for instance, for those of us who participated in a campaign to counter the efforts by several Latin American States to weaken the enforcement powers of the Inter-American human rights system (DUE PROCESS OF LAW FOUNDATION, 2012). In response to our campaign, several States forcefully countered that the United States was demanding compliance with decisions of the Inter-American Commission and Court, even as it ignored the Commission’s recommendation to close down Guantánamo; and that the US has not ratified the American Convention on Human Rights.

In sum, the call for priority setting is important at the organisational level — although even at that scale its results are far from clear, as the likelihood of success is not the only relevant criterion for determining priorities (LEVINE, 2014). But when extrapolated to the human rights field as a whole — to the “we in the international human rights community” that Hafner-Burton and others write about — it is unfeasible and even counterproductive.

2.2 Towards a human rights ecosystem

As noted, the main trait of the contemporary human rights movement is its striking diversity. The twenty-first century has witnessed a true explosion of actors who use the language and values of human rights and surpass, by far, the traditional boundaries of human rights.

In light of this, I have argued that instead of reinforcing the traditional boundaries of the field, human rights theory and practice must be expanded, so as to open spaces for new actors, themes, and strategies that have emerged in the last two decades. To capture and maximise this diversity, I have suggested elsewhere that the field should be understood as an ecosystem, rather than as a unified movement or institutional architecture (RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO, 2013, 2014a). As with every ecosystem, the emphasis should be on the highly disparate contributions of its members, and the relationships and connections between them.

Just looking around we see examples of this ecosystem in motion. With regards to the diversity of actors, current human rights campaigns involve not only (and often, not mainly) professional NGOs and specialised international agencies, but also many others. For example, I have witnessed this diversity in action in a recent campaign to ensure compliance with the Inter-American Court ruling that condemned the Ecuadorian government for illegally authorising the exploitation of oil within the territory of the indigenous people of Sarayaku in the Amazon (INTER-AMERICAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS, Sarayaku indigenous people v. Ecuador, 2012). The campaign includes the Sarayaku people, social movements (mainly the Ecuadorian indigenous movement), local NGOs (like the Pachamama Foundation), international NGOs (Cejil), national NGOs from other countries who work internationally (Dejusticia), and online activists networks and citizen journalism outlets (like Change.org). While in these and other campaigns power differentials persist (between North and South, professionals and non-professionals, etc.), efforts to mitigate them through different forms of collaboration are also evident.

A similar ecosystem approach is required with regard to the expanding range of topics that the human rights movement is taking up. This is clear, for instance, in the realm of socio-economic rights. Although initially raising doubts among scholars (SUNSTEIN, 1996) and advocates (ROTH, 2004) in the North, efforts by NGOs, movements and scholars in the South have successfully incorporated them into the legal and political repertoire of the field. As a result, socio-economic rights are recognised in international law and in constitutions throughout the world, and have become the focal point of large sectors of the human rights field, giving rise to new theories of justice and human rights (SEN, 2011).

Activists, academics, and courts in countries including Argentina, Colombia, India, Kenya, and South Africa have developed sophisticated legal doctrines and theories that have improved compliance with socio-economic rights (GARGARELLA, 2011, GAURI; BRINKS, 2008, LIEBENBERG, 2010). International human rights agencies such as the UN Special Rapporteurs, the African Commission, and the Inter-American Court are busy creating content and effectiveness for these rights (ABRAMOVICH; PAUTASSI, 2009, LANGFORD, 2009). They do all this without diluting the idea of human rights into social justice, and without weakening civil and political rights.

An equally open and pluralistic approach is required with regard to the strategies in the field. Classical, “boomerang effect” strategies (KECK; SIKKINK, 1998) – whereby organisations like Amnesty and Human Rights Watch have successfully pressured Northern States to use their influence on Southern States to get the latter to comply with human rights – will continue to be important. But multi-polarity makes it increasingly difficult for strategies centred on Europe and the United States to be effective, as the current crises in Syria and Ukraine bear witness. Thus, human rights organisations are trying new approaches. The above-mentioned campaign to preserve the powers of the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights is a case in point. Through what I describe as a “multiple boomerang” strategy, Latin American NGOs (CELS, Conectas, Dejusticia, DPLF, IDL and Fundar) forged a successful coalition in defence of the Commission when it came under attack from governments throughout the region between 2011 and 2013 (RODRÍGUEZ-GARAVITO, 2014c). Since the United States was part of the problem (it never ratified the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights), and its regional influence has declined, lobbying the US government to put pressure on its Latin American counterparts to back off would have been useless, even counter-productive. Thus, national NGOs chose to put pressure on their national governments to support the Inter-American Commission, with the Brazilian government ultimately tipping the balance in favour of the Commission. Thus, it was a coalition of national organisations, lobbying their national governments and the emerging power of the region, which ultimately made the difference.
3 Conclusion

As in any ecosystem, the strength of the human rights field will depend on symbiosis, that is, the interaction among its different actors, to the advantage of the latter and the broader cause they share. Collaboration and complementarity will thus become even more important to the survival and thriving of the field as a whole.

Nurturing collaborations is easier said than done. For dominant human rights organisations like Human Rights Watch and Amnesty, this implies a difficult challenge: transitioning from the vertical and highly autonomous modus operandi that has allowed them to make key contributions, to a more horizontal model that would allow them to work with networks of diverse actors. For the time being, their efforts to globalise their operations by opening offices in new centres of power in the Global South have failed to translate into new forms of engagement, so as to interact with local, national and regional organisations on an equal footing in terms of initiative, decision-making and authorship. For domestic organisations, adjusting to the new ecosystem entails pursuing strategies that allow them to link up with each other, and use the new leverage points created by increased multi-polarity, as well as opening themselves up to non-legal professionals, social movements, and online activists.

In sum, we need to see the human rights field as a diverse ecosystem, rather than as a hierarchy. In a more complex and interdependent world, our questions need to be informed by biology as much as by law and politics. We need to spend less time on gatekeeping and more time on symbiosis.

REFERENCES

Bibliography and Other Sources

MULTIPOLARITY

__________. 2014c. From single to multiple boomerangs: three models of transnational human rights advocacy. openDemocracy, openGlobalRights [online], Oct.

Jurisprudence

NOTES

1. For recent overviews of this literature, see Douzinas and Gearty (2014) and Gearty and Douzinas (2012).
Previous numbers are available at <www.surjournal.org>.

SUR 7, v. 4, n. 7, Dec. 2007

Lucia Nader
The role of NGOs in the UN Human Rights Council

Cecilia Macdowell Santos
Transnational legal activism and the State: reflections on cases against Brazil in the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights

Transitional Justice

Tara Urs
Imagining locally-motivated accountability for mass atrocities: voices from Cambodia

Cecily Rose and Francis M. Ssekandi
The pursuit of transitional justice and African traditional values: a clash of civilizations – The case of Uganda

Ramona Vijeyarasa
Facing Australia’s history: truth and reconciliation for the stolen generations

Elizabeth Salomón G.
The long road in the fight against poverty and its promising encounter with human rights

Interview with Juan Méndez
By Glenda Mezarobba

SUR 8, v. 5, n. 8, Jun. 2008

Martín Abregú
Human rights for all: from the struggle against authoritarianism to the construction of an all-inclusive democracy – A view from the Southern Cone and Andean region

Amita Dhanda
Constructing a new human rights lexicon: Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

Laura Davis Mattar
Legal recognition of sexual rights – a comparative analysis with reproductive rights

James L. Cavallaro and Stephanie Erin Brewer
The virtue of following: the role of Inter-American litigation in campaigns for social justice

Right to Health and Access to Medicaments

Paul Hunt and Rajat Khosla
The human right to medicines

Thomas Pogge
Medicines for the world: boosting innovation without obstructing free access

Jorge Conettes and Domingo Lovera Parra
Access to medical treatment for people living with HIV/AIDS: success without victory in Chile

Gabriela Costa Chaves, Marcela Fogaça Vieira and Renata Reis
Access to medicines and intellectual property in Brazil: reflections and strategies of civil society

SUR 9, v. 5, n. 9, Dec. 2008

Barbora Bukovská
Perpetrating good: unintended consequences of international human rights advocacy

Jeremy Sarkin
Prisons in Africa: an evaluation from a human rights perspective

Rebecca Saunders
Lost in translation: expressions of human suffering, the language of human rights, and the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission

Sixty Years of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro
Sixty years after the Universal Declaration: navigating the contradictions

Fernanda Doz Costa
Poverty and human rights from rhetoric to legal obligations: a critical account of conceptual frameworks

Eitan Felsner
A new frontier in economic and social rights advocacy? Turning quantitative data into a tool for human rights accountability

Katherine Short
From Commission to Council: has the United Nations succeeded in creating a credible human rights body?

Anthony Romero
Interview with Anthony Romero, Executive Director of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU)

SUR 10, v. 6, n. 10, Jun. 2009

Anuj Bhuvanani

Daniela de Vito, Aisha Gill and Damien Sh-Ort
Rape characterised as genocide

Christian Courtis
Notes on the implementation by Latin American courts of the ILO Convention 169 on indigenous peoples

Benyam D. Mezmur
Intercountry adoption as a measure of last resort in Africa: Advancing the rights of a child rather than a right to a child

Human Rights of People on the Move: Migrants and Refugees

Katharine Derderian and Liesbeth Schockaert
Responding to “mixed” migration flows: A humanitarian perspective

Juan Carlos Murillo
The legitimate security interests of the State and international refugee protection

Manuela Trindade Viana
International cooperation and internal displacement in Colombia: Facing the challenges of the largest humanitarian crisis in South America

Joseph Amon and Katherine Todrys
Access to antiretroviral treatment for migrant populations in the Global South

Pablo Ceriani Cernadas
European migration control in the African territory: The omission of the extraterritorial character of human rights obligations

SUR 11, v. 6, n. 11, Dec. 2009

Víctor Abramovich
From Massive Violations to Structural Patterns: New Approaches and Classic Tensions in the Inter-American Human Rights System

Viviana Bohórquez Monsalve and Javier Aguirre Román
Tensions of Human Dignity: Conceptualization and Application to International Human Rights Law

Debora Diniz, Lívia Barbosa and Wederson Rufino dos Santos
Disability, Human Rights and Justice

Julia Teresa Ripoll
Love in the Time of Cholera: LGBT Rights in Colombia

Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Malcolm Langford
Domestic Adjudication and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: A Socio-Legal Review
IMPLEMENTATION AT THE NATIONAL LEVEL OF THE DECISIONS OF THE REGIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS SYSTEMS

MARIA ISSAEVA, IRINA SERGEAEVA AND MARIA SUCHKOVA
Enforcement of the Judgments of the European Court of Human Rights in Russia: Recent Developments and Current Challenges

CÁSSIA MARIA ROSATO AND LUDMILA CERQUEIRA CORREIA
The Damiano Ximenes Lopes Case: Changes and Challenges Following the First Ruling Against Brazil in the Inter-American Court of Human Rights

DAMIÁN A. GONZÁLEZ-SALZBERG
The Implementation of Decisions from the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Argentina: An Analysis of the Jurisprudential Swings of the Supreme Court

MARCIA NINA BERNARDES
Inter-American Human Rights System as a Transnational Public Sphere: Legal and Political Aspects of the Implementation of International Decisions

SPECIAL ISSUE: CONECTAS HUMAN RIGHTS - 10 YEARS
The Making of an International Organization from/in the South

PATRICIO GALELLA AND CARLOS ESPÓSITO
Extraordinary Renditions in the Fight Against Terrorism. Forced Disappearances?

BRIDGET CONLEY-ZILKIC
A Challenge to Those Working in the Field of Genocide Prevention and Response

MARTA RODRÍGUEZ DE ASSIS MACHADO, JOSÉ RODRIGO RODRÍGUEZ, FLAVIO MARQUES PROL, GABRIELA JUSTINO DA SILVA, MARINA ZANATA GANZAROLLI AND RENATA DO VALE ELIAS
Law Enforcement at Issue: Constitutionality of Maria da Penha Law in Brazilian Courts

SIMON M. WELDEHAIMANOT
The ACHPR in the Case of Southern Cameroons

ANDRÉ LUIZ SICILIANO
The Role of the Universalization of Human Rights and Migration in the Formation of a New Global Governance

548 ■ SUR - INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL ON HUMAN RIGHTS
FOREIGN POLICY AND HUMAN RIGHTS

DAVID PETRASEK

ADRIANA ERTHAL ABDENUR AND DANÍLO MARCONDES DE SOUZA NETO
Brazil’s Development Cooperation with Africa: What Role for Democracy and Human Rights

CARLOS CERDA DUEÑAS
Incorporating International Human Rights Standards in the Wake of the 2011 Reform of the Mexican Constitution: Progress and Limitations

ELISA MARA COIMBRA
Inter-American System of Human Rights: Challenges to Compliance with the Court’s Decisions in Brazil

CONOR FOLEY
The Evolving Legitimacy of Humanitarian Interventions

DEISY VENTURA
Public Health and Brazilian Foreign Policy

CAMILA LISSA ASANO
Foreign Policy and Human Rights in Emerging Countries: Insights Based on the Work of an Organization from the Global South

INTERVIEW WITH MAJA DARUWALA (CHRI) AND SUSAN WILDING (CIVICUS)
Emerging Democracies’ Foreign Policy: What Place for Human Rights? A Look at India and South Africa

DAVID KINLEY
Finding Freedom in China: Human Rights in the Political Economy

LAURA BETANCUR RESTREPO
The Promotion and Protection of Human Rights through Legal Clinics and their Relationships with Social Movements: Achievements and Challenges in the Case of Conscientious Objection to Compulsory Military Service in Colombia

ALEXANDRA LOPES DA COSTA
Modern-Day Inquisition: A Report on Criminal Persecution, Exposure of Intimacy and Violation of Rights in Brazil

ANA CRISTINA GONZÁLEZ VÉLEZ AND VIVIANA BOHÓRQUEZ MONSALVE
Case Study on Colombia: Judicial Standards on Abortion to Advance the Agenda of the Cairo Programme of Action